At home His late Majesty paid equal honor to the first day of the week. On the occasion of the last anniversary of his birth, which fell on a Sunday, he refused to allow the public demonstrations to begin until Monday, and urged the dedication of the day to prayer and charity for the lepers, for which noble action the Bishop of Honolulu thanked him in a letter which I have been allowed to any difficulty. see. I have also his Lordship's sermon before me as I write. Every Sunday afternoon, too, the King was wont to summon to the palace a choir from one of the native congregations for an hour of singing and prayer. His Majesty was ever greatly con-cerned for the lepers of his kingdom, and quite recently chartered a vessel for a visit to Molokai, where he selected a site for the monument to be erected to the memory of Father Damien, and cheered the settlement by his kind and loving words. Nothing was dearer to his heart than the Christianization of his people, and his private subscriptions for new churches for their accommodation ran up among the thousands.

And she is only one of a great multitude of the forgotten classes for whom his sympathies were aroused, and to whom the royal patronage and purse were continually extended. No one, no matter how poor or friendless, ever applied in vain for help and recognition; and that lovely island kingdom in the Pacific must be a veritable house of mourning to-day because of the absence of him whose heart felt the miseries of the struggling children of poverty and genius.

I have it also from one well acquainted with the couple that His Majesty was always very thoughtful of the wishes and projects of the Queen; and, from a personal inspection of the correspondence, I know how he entered into the pious and charitable schemes of the the banqueting salon. LONG-DISTANCE TALK. A new land and submarine cable line has just been completed between London and Paris, and a few days ago direct telephonic communication was established between the two cities. The first words over the new line were spoken by the wife of the French Minister of Industry and Colonies, and then a general conversation was held, the line working without

The success of this line indicates a future for the telephone which was certainly unsuspended until very recently. It has been believed that only short distances could be covered effectively, and that for remote places reliance must still be had upon the electric telegraph; but if London can talk with Paris over land wires and a submarine cable it is hardly possible to set bounds to the future of the telephone. There have been so many improvements made upon the original discovery of Alexander Graham Bell that the telephone of to-day is almost a new invention, and it has been asserted that the Bell Company controls a large number of patents in addition to those already

To cover such a distance would certainly require the most favorable conditions of every kind, for the leakage is enormous where wires stretch for thousands of miles and are exposed to all sorts of temperature and climate. Theoretically there is no reason why a person in this city should not converse with one in Chicago by means of the telephone, but in actual practice there must be a great many obstacles, and it is not certain that they will not prove to be insuperable. However, of this we may be certain, that telephony is a progressive science, and that merit, a fine musician, master of four great improvements will be made languages.
